A HEART of STONE

The skyscraper at 1401 Elm Street may look unassuming these days, but it has a colorful history. The structure housed Hunt Oil, Dallas Petroleum Club and, fictitiously, Exting Oil on the TV show Dallas. Now, Drever Capital Management is doing a $150 million restoration of the long-vacant building and its precious white marble, which was sourced from the same Greek quarry as the Parthenon. The Drever is set to open in early 2019, with a Thompson Hotel, luxury residences, restaurants, retail, and office space. Read more at papercitymag.com/drever-high-rise.

DREAM WEAVER
Dallas native Kate Garrett's handbags aren't just to-be-seen; they're pieces of culture and tradition. La Viajera sells brightly patterned mochilas, hand-woven by the Wayuu people of Colombia. As Garrett says, "These bags are the heritage and livelihood of a native Colombian people." Read more at papercitymag.com/kate-garrett

JOVIAL JUBILEE
Julideo Park & Community Center celebrated its 20th birthday by throwing its first-ever gala at the Omni Dallas that raised an impressive $1.6 million. The proceeds provide funds for eight years to support Jubilee's new Specialized Student Support Program for children with special learning needs. Read more at papercitymag.com/julideo-park

NEWS BITES
If Plano's Legacy West wasn't already a foodie destination, it's now. 55,000-square-foot food hall sought to put it on the map. Legacy Hall has just opened, introducing 22 restaurants and bars plus a craft brewery to the booming area. Read more at papercitymag.com/legacy-hall
